Rules clarification for events :

Rules in roman numerals and letters are referring to the original french rules; those in numerals only to the english decimal version.

! As [VI;B] [6.2] states, the rules take precedence over the events, meaning all limitations applying to the players also apply to the events. Here are the rules to remember when rolling events :

- The Current controlling a region cannot change if the region is revolting [VII;D1] [7.4.1].
- No revolt can happen in a region with an Army or a revolt [VII;D2] [7.4.2].
- Coalition control cannot be changed to a current control unless the event is a Royalist revolt, in which case the Royalist control marker is added to the Coalition one [IX;G] [9.7.1].
- Armies peaced out (discarded) by an event do not count as eliminated for purposes of regaining availability if the players use the optional Army Return rules [XI;F] [15.1].
- Armies peaced out (discarded) by an event do not come back into play if War is declared by the Coalition Track rising back to level II or III after being lowered to I [XI;B1] [9.2].

The treaty of Basel took the prussians out of the war until 1806, after Napoleon's takeover, not represented by the game. It seems correct to assume that unless the Government declares war, all peaced out armies should remain out-of-game (abiding by the treaty's terms). Of course, this does not apply to La Jaunaye's treaty, which was not recognised by the Royalists (as represented in the rules by the lack of a discard effect to their armies). It is thus recommended to distinguish between unavailable, available, eliminated, and peaced out armies

How to read this document :

- All game conditions needed for an event to happen follow this writing: (game condition*).
- Underlined characters should not be dead or in the Prison du Temple for the event to happen.
- Underlined events are one-time events only; should they be rolled again (even under a different regime) no event should happen.
- Boldened terms are to indicate an emphasis on effect duration or to signify a specific game term.

Translation Notes

Initial Intent

My aim is first and foremost to translate all random events in a way that the original authors' intent in game procedure is safeguarded. I have kept all capital letters given to common nouns.

About Gyges' Decimal Version

Regime names have been harmonized with Mark Bygney's (Gyges) choices for his English Rules. The only exception is my use of "dread" (deep fear) instead of his "wrath" (deep anger) for the Epouvante regime. In french there is a strict gradation of peur (fear) turning into terreur (terror), then into épouvante (dread).

Errata

In the original french rulebook, it is precised events cannot happen if illogical or contradictory [VI;B], I used this rule as a measure of what I should add and remove from the original text.

I have added game conditions to some events to avoid the interruption of game flow needed to check the status of some characters and removed some conditions that were unnecessary (due to roll modifiers). Events that are entirely underlined are one-time only events, they represent something that cannot happen again, the ones that outright kill a character are evident, but I chose to count among those one-time events the ones where a single day or event is directly referred (x's defection to the enemies, tuilerie's day, ...).

Concerning the rule that no current change can happen in a revolted region : game structure forces players to calm revolts to be able to undertake an action to change control, thus I do not see why events should out control of revolting regions.

In Legislative / Economy / 4. : the original document lacked "becomes neutral" to Bordeaux.

In Legislative / Paris Commune / 3. : the original document stated "If "no": Commune -2" but it makes no sense for the Commune to be sated by the refusal of its proposal. The fourth and tenth events' organization was taken as reference for my modification.

In Terror / Counter-revolution / 5. : changed "same as 2." to "same as 4.", the original effect seemed to be a typo in comparison to the other effects in the same category.

In Thermidor & Directorate / Counter-revolution / 4. : The treaty of Basel took the prussians out of the war until 1806, after Napoleon's takeover, not represented by the game. It has been made as a one-time event as rule [XI;B1] states that in case a new war is declared, only the troops available at the end of the previous war needs to enter play.

In Thermidor & Directorate & Mercy / Counter-revolution / 6. : added the condition that a catholic army must be on the map for a peace treaty with the catholic troops to be made.

In Dread & Prairial & FROI / Politics / 11. : the event as-written permitted some kind of betrayal without flipping over the personality, which makes no sense. I chose to add as a condition for the S-C to control Collot to allow for fighting over him.

In Directorate / Politics : were changed some Coups from "popular" to "limited" when no popular Coup was planned in the rulebook (reminder : limited Coups are Commune-less popular Coups).

In Directorate / Politics / 8. : I added as a requirement for Barras to be owned by the Marais if the event must fire (as he gives a bonus to the Marais).

In Directorate / Paris Commune / 9. : added the under this regime only mention to royalist propaganda, as in contrast to other one-turn effects, which are always specified, this one is do not specify it. The propaganda has lasting effects, but only under a regime which permits it (it cannot be extended to Prairial which can be instated by a popular revolutionary sentiment).

In Prairial / Counter-revolution / 5. : the same mistake that was present in Terror is corrected, as the whole paragraph from Terror / Counter-revolution is reused here.

In Federal First Republic / Paris Commune / 8. & 9. : changed "same as 5." to "same as 7." as event 7. was the first one referring betrayal effects (and event 5. did not).

In Federal First Republic / Paris Commune / 8. : changed "same as 8." to "same as 7.", the original effect was definitely a typo.

In FROI / Counter-revolution / 8. : interpreted the bonus income to last until the end of the game, as it can last multiple turns as long as its condition is valid.

V_5 changelog : whole document formatting pass to improve readability; added game conditions to the events where it could help facilitating the game flow (checking if x is dead or alive; if an event happened); underlined characters whose status' needs to be checked before applying the event; underlined one-time events (I used some interpretation), added some precisions about the rise of the Commune via S-C control, typos, translation improvements, addition of general event rules on the front page, boldened some stuff.
