There isn't all that much for you to do in the early game. It's a surprising contradiction, but even though you are ostensibly friendly to the conservative Feullaint, they are actually too liberal for you. In reality you have no truck with Assemblies at all and the divine right of kings is the only thing that makes any sense to you.

If the game ends conservatively in the Legislative regime, you will probably still lose unless by some miracle you manage to take political control of at least half the map. This is very unlikely to happen however as your personalities will be arrested long before that, as soon as the government sees it starting to happen in fact. Instead, to be sure of winning you need to follow an unexpected path of actually encouraging revolt in France.

Thus, throw your support to a Declaration of War on the enemies of France, or, failing that, consider supporting the otherwise inimical Gironde or Marais if they will do things which raise the Coalition Level and Clergy Levels, i.e. pass the Anti-Privilege, Anti-Clerical and Military laws. That should raise the Coalition level to 17 where foreign and Catholic (needs Clergy at 17) armies can be brought on, the real source of your power. But the Declaration of War is the easiest way.

Meanwhile, try to stay out of prison and above all, work on winning back Louis XVI. Not only can he free your arrested personalities and raise the Coalition Level by one each turn, he can make unpopular decisions in the Assembly which ultimately help your cause. (Also, the following Random Events Table results increase the Coalition rating during Legislative: Political - no. 4, Coalition - nos. 2-5. These results increase the Clergy rating during Legislative: Coalition - nos. 4, 9, 10, 12.)

Revolt	Bourges

The primary actor of the early game. Ideally France will stay in the Legislative Regime forever. Arrest everyone you can. Pass laws which will mollify the commune and other forces dangerous to the Republic. Quash revolts and build up your fame. In general, try to hold down the lid on boiling France. Consider a daring strategy of passing many laws to drive inflation through the roof and prevent anyone from doing much of anything.

Probably the side that needs to make deals more than any other. Try to expand your number of territories for when an election comes. Conserve funds. Pass laws to increase your fame. Your favorite regime is probably Thermidor so it might be best to lean toward the revolutionary side of things for most of the game so that they will rapidly move to Terror and then allow you to move them to Thermidor. Consider helping the Royalist to take away Feuillant regions so as to meet the conditions necessary for the Terror

The primary re-actor of the early game. Wrest control of government from Feuillant. Take over areas from him in case there is an election. Kick reactionary personalities out of Paris. Pass laws to increase the outrage of Commune and Clergy. Consider helping the Royalist to take away Feuillant regions so as to meet the conditions necessary for the Convention. Help your fellow revolutionaries the Mountain and Sans-Culottes. Remember, no matter how well you are doing, you can't win unless both of them also do well, unless both Feuillant and Marais can be kept low.
